Admission requirements

German Philology can be studied as a major subject by any candidate who successfully passes the entrance examination. A separate entrance examination is held at the beginning of each autumn term for students presently enrolled at the University who wish to study German as a subsidiary (minor) subject.

Teaching begins in the autumn. Lectures, exercises and seminars can last from one to four study periods. Courses are arranged on the basis of current study requirements.

Study guidance

Students can turn to their assigned teacher tutor for guidance on study-related questions, during office hours. For queries regarding particular courses, students are advised to turn to the instructor in question. Instructors may be contacted about courses during their respective office hours. Student tutors also provide help regarding study matters. Based on the council of their teacher tutor, students establish a personal study plan ("HOPS" in Finnish) outlining the path of their studies.

German Philology

German Philology – or 'Germanistik' – in Finland is part of an international field of teaching and research on German language, literature and culture. German Philology instruction at the University of Oulu follows recent developments in the discipline and is closely aligned with current research in the German-speaking world. Consequently, the programme is influenced by new important trends in international research, but it is also in a position to influence the research field through its own unique research perspectives.

In addition to German linguistics, the main areas of interest are the various uses of the contemporary German language and the history of and current development in culture and literature. The underlying principle of the studies is based on a strong academic and practical approach.

The curriculum and research at the department focus on the following areas:

- Grammar and Syntax
- Modern German Literature

- Psychology of Literature
- Poetry and Poetry Translation
- Text Theory
- International Business Communication

As a subject, German Philology programme consists of two basic parts: practical language skills and theoretical expertise of German Philology. The study requirements in German Philology are divided into five categories:

1. Theoretical Linguistics
2. Applied Linguistics
3. Culture Studies
4. Literary Studies
5. International Business Communication

Employment prospects

Graduates of German Philology typically find employment as, for example, teachers, trainers, export advisors, marketing advisors, reporters, secretaries, translators and consultants. When seeking employment, graduates should take initiative and contact employers directly; in addition to job advertisements, these contacts enable graduates to find direct access to working life. In 2008, for example, the majority of graduates secured employment and some moved directly from their studies to professional work.

Practical information

The department's primary teaching methods include exercises, lectures and seminars. Many courses also include interactive teaching, independent study or group work. For example, students may be expected to work alone or in groups on an independently chosen topic within the theoretical framework of the course. In many courses, students are expected to submit written assignments which follow academic guidelines. Attendance at exercises which aim to improve practical language skills is mandatory without exception (80% attendance of total contact-time). In cases of missed attendance in a contact-taught course, absences may be compensated through additional assignments (at the teacher's discretion), thereby qualifying the student for examination. Alternatively, a student may be exempted from contact-teaching if a corresponding skill level can be evidenced.

Many courses can also be assessed through written examination or "book exam". Students wishing to take a written examination should always consult the designated instructor about required reading material and the exam format (traditional book exam or a written home assignment).

A list of book exam reading materials can be found on the department's website. However, students are welcome to offer their own suggestions to teachers.

Language training

All students of German Philology may participate in student exchange. Students have the opportunity to apply for an ERASMUS stipend for study at a partner university. Credit for courses completed at a partner university during student exchange can be accredited at the University of Oulu by an instructor or a faculty amanuensis upon agreement. Students wishing to have ERASMUS credit approved by the University of Oulu should consult the department professor, who is responsible for deciding on individual cases. An ERASMUS exchange is also equivalent to the compulsory Language Training module (5 ECTS credits).

Students at ERASMUS partner institutions will primarily study German, but other languages are also possible.

In order to qualify to study a language other than German while on ERASMUS exchange, students need to have the corresponding rights to study the language in question at the University of Oulu. Many other subjects are typically available at partner universities: for example, intercultural communication, business, and pedagogics. If students wish to have their ERASMUS credits approved by the University, they need to consult the department in advance. More information about ERASMUS studies is available from the faculty amanuensis.

Study packages and learning outcomes

Main subject studies

Study package:

Basic and Intermediate Studies (25 + 45 ECTS credits)

The Basic Studies package provides students an overall view of German Philology. In the Intermediate Studies, students have the opportunity to choose from a wider selection of compulsory and elective courses, and may expand their understanding of the field according to their personal or academic interests.

Advanced Studies (80 ECTS credits)

The goal of the Advanced Studies is to equip students with the necessary skills for independent study and for choosing specific research topics within German Philology. At this stage of the studies, there are less compulsory courses available and students are instead expected to choose from a number of elective courses. This will help student find a suitable topic for independently writing a Master's Thesis.

Subsidiary (minor) subject studies

The smallest unit that can be completed by those studying German Philology as a subsidiary subject is the Basic Studies package (25 ECTS credits). However, those students aiming to become teachers are required to complete both the Basic Studies and Intermediate Studies (25 + 35 ECTS credits) in order to qualify to teach the subject in Finnish schools. The Candidate's Thesis (10 ECTS credits) in the Intermediate Studies is not compulsory for students taking German Philology as a subsidiary subject.

Successful completion of the Basic Studies package is considered to fulfil the foreign language requirements of the Language and Communication Studies.

Translation Studies subsidiary subject package (25 ECTS credits)

The department of German Philology offers a subsidiary subject in translation (German into Finnish). A subsidiary subject package in Translation Studies consists of courses some of which a) are included in the list of available courses in German Philology, or b) are only offered as part of the Translation Studies package. Students not wishing to complete the subsidiary subject package may nevertheless sign up for any Translation Studies course, with the exception of the Translation Training course, and may use the courses as elective courses in the Intermediate Studies package.

All credits can only be awarded once: either in the Intermediate Studies or in the subsidiary subject package.

The Translation Studies package is open to any student studying German Philology either as a major or as a subsidiary subject.

International Business Communication

Within the German Philology programme, students have the opportunity to choose a study path in International Business Communication. Recommended subsidiary subjects that support this study path are, for instance, Marketing, Management or International Business. As the German economic region is of great importance to the Finnish export industry, experts of intercultural communication are considered highly employable by businesses.

Basic Studies

Students can demonstrate the ability to

- recognise sounds in the German sound system and reproduce them in pronunciation and intonation
- translate basic texts from Finnish into German with the help of an electronic programme
- analyse the content and structure of popular science texts and simple academic texts
- search for academic material in the library and in electronic databases
- compose basic academic texts in German on linguistic, cultural or literary topics

Students are familiar with

- the basic concepts of linguistics and literary studies
- the historical, political and cultural structures of the German-speaking countries

Intermediate Studies

Students can demonstrate the ability to

- develop and maintain their spoken language skills
- translate intermediate level texts with the help of dictionaries and digital translation tools
- analyse intermediate-level scientific texts
- independently search for secondary academic sources
- follow lectures of intermediate-level content
- use basic academic working methods (summary, referencing technique, analysis, interpretation)
- compose an academic research paper (Candidate's Thesis)
- participate in compulsory language training abroad and make any necessary arrangements for it
- successfully study in a German-speaking university

Students are familiar with

- central theories in linguistics, culture studies and literary studies

Advanced Studies

Students are expected to

- speak German with the segmental and suprasegmental features in pronunciation properly without making mistakes that may disturb oral communication
- translate longer and more demanding non-fiction texts with the help of dictionary and digital translation tools
- compose scholarly and administrative texts with the help of different academic tools
- analyse academic texts according to their morphological and thematic structures and relations; address any contradictions; describe different phenomena; and formulate logical arguments
- use the conventions of academic writing (bibliographies, citations, excerpts) in a longer research project
- identify a topic and define a research question for a Master's Thesis

Students can demonstrate

- knowledge of contemporary research questions and debates in German and Finnish culture and the ability to compare them
- knowledge of relevant theories in linguistic, cultural and literary topics for the writing of a Master's Thesis
- knowledge of the central theories of their chosen field and the ability to adapt them critically for their own work
