Admission requirements

Any student presently registered and enrolled at the University of Oulu is entitled to study Art History. The suggested time to begin studies in the programme is at the beginning of the autumn term, and studies are officially commenced by simply participating in the courses.

Places and times of the teaching can be found in the programme's curriculum published at the beginning of each term. The curriculum can be found on the Art History bulletin board and on the programme's website.

Study guidance

Study guidance is provided by the Lecturer of Art History, tel. +358 29 448 3334, office HU336. Office hours are on Thursdays from 2 pm to 4 pm, but also other times can be separately agreed on.

The teaching materials in the Art History programme are in digital form; updated versions are published each autumn and can be acquired from the Lecturer of Art History. The materials also include all kinds of useful information, such as guidance about completing courses, information on exam/course books and pictures for picture exams.

Art History

Why is it that Paavo Nurmi is running naked on his monument but Eero Mäntyranta is skiing with clothes on in his? Why is the ornamentation on the ceiling and dome in the Oulu Cathedral similar to that in the Pantheon in Rome? What is an academic icon like? These are good Art History questions.

Art History is the history of images (visual arts) and architecture (the art of construction). Considering eras, Art History is interested in history from prehistory to modern times, and geographically the interest is, besides Europe, often on cultures outside of Europe.

As a discipline Art History of course also studies pictures and architecture from perspectives other than just historical. Research in the field has recently begun to pay more and more attention to questions concerning the examination and the observer of the picture or work of architecture.

Despite its name, Art History also focuses on contemporary art. But Art History cannot be studied without an understanding of the ancient myths of Classical Antiquity and the Judeo-Christian tradition.

Art History adds to our knowledge of our European roots, by considering the Western and Eastern traditions. Therefore, Art History also has an important educational significance.

At the University of Oulu, Art History can only be studied as a subsidiary (minor) subject, covering 60 ECTS credits. Art History is a beneficial subsidiary subject for students of various subjects in the Faculty of Humanities (subjects such as History, Literature, Cultural Anthropology, Archaeology, languages etc.). Students from other faculties are also often interested in completing the Basic studies (25 ECTS credits).

The lecturer is the person responsible for the Art History programme. There are also three docents in Art History at the University. Besides conventional lectures and exams, the studies consist of various projects, lecture diaries, analyses, essays, seminars and excursions.

Practical information

Book exams are taken on the examination dates of the Faculty of Humanities and on the examination dates of the degree group (Group I – History) by signing up in Weboodi. A reading list for book exams is available on the programme's bulletin board and on the Art History website.

The (picture) lecture exam for Elementary Course in Art History is held on a date that is agreed on during the lectures, not on a general examination date.

The content of the optional studies options in the Basic Studies and Intermediate Studies must be agreed upon with the lecturer, as must the compulsory essays in the Intermediate Studies.

For the Basic and Intermediate Studies courses, it is recommended that students complete them in the given order. This way, the information and understanding of Art History develops coherently. On the other hand, after commencement of studies, the students may progress their studies in the two study packages side by side.

The Intermediate Studies package offers students better freedom to plan the contents of their studies according to their own interests than the Basic Studies package. Before starting the study package, however, it is recommended that students contact the Lecturer of Art History for more information and guidance about the available options.

Courses in the Basic Studies package are assessed by the Lecturer of Art History, but courses in Intermediate Studies may also be assessed by the docents or part-time teachers. More information on this and the courses in question can be obtained from the programme's bulletin board and the Art History website.

Often courses provided in other subjects (for example, in the field of history, Classical Archaeology, Ancient Languages and Culture, Literature) can be used in the student's Art History studies. A suitable course may support the development of Art History knowledge, and therefore may be accredited as an optional course.

Study packages and learning outcomes

Basic Studies

Upon completion of the Basic Studies package in Art History, the students have the informational and conceptual expertise as well as the skills needed to critically examine visual arts and architecture and related research. They understand the nature of academic thinking in Art History and acknowledge the special characteristics and different approaches in scholarly research on Art History.

Intermediate Studies

Upon completion of the Intermediate Studies package in Art History, students have a versatile understanding of the perspectives, methods and sources of research as well as an understanding of the scope of the field and complexity of research in Art History. In addition, students have a firm grasp of the most essential conventions of research and methodological trends in Art History, and understand the methodological fundament of research in Art History.

Upon completion of the Intermediate Studies package, students have the skills required for Master Level studies, scholarly problem formulation, use of information resources and source materials, for documentation of information as well as academic problem solving, argumentation, critique and dialogue. Students have the skills needed to plan and conduct independent projects concerning research and application of scholarly knowledge. In addition, students have the skills to compose small theses and presentations as well as other written and oral projects based on their own expertise.
