Admission requirements

In order to study Literature as a major subject, students must pass an entrance examination which is organised every year. The Literature degree programme is also open to all other University of Oulu students as a subsidiary subject. Information regarding courses currently on offer is made available in the form of a curriculum issued at the beginning of each term on the degree programme's website and on WebOodi.

Study guidance

Starting at the beginning of their first term, new students receive guidance on practical issues and planning their studies from teacher tutors and in peer groups. As part of the tutoring process, students produce a personal study plan (e-HOPS/e-PSP) for their BA and MA degrees. Updating the plan is required at the beginning of both the Intermediate and the Advanced Studies.

The plan is directive; it is a tool with which students follow the advancement of their studies. Central in the plan are the students' goals regarding their studies and career. More detailed instructions about e-HOPS/e-PSP can be found online on the websites of the Faculty of Humanities and the Literature degree programme.

For general study guidance, students may turn to individual teachers. More specific guidance regarding individual courses is given by the teacher responsible. A list of teachers responsible for examinations and courses can be found on the Literature bulletin board and on the degree programme's website. Information regarding courses is also posted on WebOodi.

A review of the studies in Literature

Literature may be studied as a major subject in the Faculty of Humanities. Students of Literature can freely choose subsidiary subjects from related disciplines, such as Art History and Film Studies. Another subsidiary subject option is Finnish, which is chosen by many Literature students with the goal of becoming employed in the field of education or communications. Many other subjects in the Faculty of Humanities, such as languages, are suitable subsidiary subjects for students in the Literature programme as are subjects from other faculties as well.

Studies in Literature provide an insight into the history of literature, the theory and methodology of literary research, and into practical analysis and interpretation of literary works. Literature is examined in relation to other art forms and phenomena of culture and society.

Literature is by its nature a rather free-form major subject; students can choose from diverse study paths according to their own interests and career goals. Already after the Basic Studies during the first year, students are able to choose from many different options, e.g. what books to read or to write essays on, and which genres of literature and optional study programmes to focus on. The Intermediate and Advanced Studies provide students with a combination of thorough knowledge and skills related to literature. Such an education increases the students' ability to comprehend and analyse large concepts. It fosters practical capabilities needed in work life, such as the abilities for independent deliberation and teamwork, and the ability to benefit from criticism. Moreover, studies in literature lead to a growth of intellectual curiosity and sensibility to different cultural meanings, which are useful skills in working life.

The teaching given in Literature varies in methods. In addition to lectures and learning in small groups, students may choose online courses and writing courses, for instance, and may complete the courses by examinations, home essays or reading groups.

Amongst the many teaching and research focuses of the programme are Finnish and general literature; literary history and contemporary literature; literary genres from poetry to the novel and from children's literature to speculative fiction. The larger cultural and social questions studied are often related to community, Northern aspects, gender, class or multiculturalism.

Literature is a beneficial subsidiary subject for students aiming for employment in the culture sector and in such professional fields where a deep knowledge of the construction of cultural meanings is necessary.

Students of Finnish and Saami can choose Literature as a subsidiary subject freely; Literature is also an open subsidiary subject for all other students in the University of Oulu. The subsidiary subject studies consist of 60 ECTS credits (25+35) of Basic and Intermediate Studies, and 60 ECTS credits of Advanced Studies.

Practical information

The works and research literature to be read. These lists are updated on our website at the beginning of each academic year. See <http://www.oulu.fi/kirjallisuus/>

Learning activities, teaching and assessment methods: It is recommended that students choose lecture and small-group teaching courses, especially at the onset of their studies, rather than taking book examinations or other methods of learning. Courses can also be completed by means of home essays, lecture diaries (learning diaries) or other forms of examination agreed upon with the teacher. Self-study groups and student-led study circles (related to the subject matters of their theses, for instance) are strongly encouraged. Students hoping to earn credit by this kind of work should contact the Professor or the Senior Lecturer responsible for the study unit in question.

Mandatory lecture courses are primarily completed by taking a formal examination held at the end of the lecture series. However, those who a) have a valid excuse for not participating in the examination, b) have previously failed the examination, or c) want to improve on their examination results, have the chance to complete the course by taking an examination on one of examination days of the Faculty or degree group (Group II – Culture Studies) or in an examination arranged separately.

Optional lecture courses (i.e. lectures which can usually be used to compensate for study units) are primarily completed by taking an examination held at the end of the lecture series. As with the mandatory courses, students may take examinations on other examination days as well.

Practicum teaching refers to teaching given to a group of approximately ten students. Practicum courses demand active participation and discussion as well as presentations and exercise work. Practicums and the Proseminar and Seminar form a continuum which gradually familiarises students with literary interpretation and analysis, as well as with the principles of literary and cultural research. Practicums, like most courses, require an 80% attendance rate.

Home essays and specialised portfolio work are the recommended methods for completing courses at the later stages of Intermediate Studies and Advanced Studies. Details (length of essays, content of portfolios, use of source material, etc.) should be agreed upon with the examiner. A lecture diary (learning diary) serves to allow commenting and further consideration of the lecture topic or subject matter of the previous lecture. A lecture diary is therefore not the same as lecture notes or a summary but should combine poignant summarisation of the lectures with independent, critical writing and commentary on the matters discussed in the lectures; in other words, a learning diary is also a lesson in itself. The lecturer provides further guidelines as to the requirements for lecture diaries. The length of home essays and lecture diaries is defined as follows: 5 ECTS credits = ca. 15 pages, 10 ECTS credits = 25 pages. Each page must have approx. 30 lines, each line about 60 characters. Times New Roman or a similar font should be used, and the font size should be 12. Up-to-date guidelines on writing essays can be found on our website. For additional information, you may also want to consult the study guide of the Faculty.

Whenever possible, the department is also involved in offering online courses in the Finnish Virtual University of Literature. The courses are completed by distance learning. More information is available on the degree programme's website.

Self-study groups and study circles are arranged on the initiative of the students themselves. The groups typically consist of 5–6 students who complete the course, or a segment of it, in similar manner to a practicum work (presentation, session record, final assignment). The students carry the responsibility for learning and maintaining group progress. The teacher initiates the group's work but is not present at most sessions.

Excluding mandatory lectures, practicums and theses, many courses can be completed as book examinations, on the examination days of the Faculty or the degree group (Group II – Cultural Studies), or, upon separate agreement, as a home essay or portfolio. Examination days can be found online at: <http://www.oulu.fi/humanities/node/21841>. Lecture series have their own examinations which require no separate registration. Exams are based on study units in their given proportion.

Students must register for faculty and degree group examinations in WebOodi ten days in advance. A list of teachers responsible for different examinations (“tentaattorilista”) can be found on the Literature bulletin board and the degree programme's website.

Credit records and grades: Completed courses are recorded in the study register. Therefore, it is essential for students to indicate their student number or social security number in full when registering for exams, and in home essays and lecture diaries. If the completed studies are such that the credits may be used for more than one course, students must without exception clearly indicate which course they wish to use their credits for in the study register. If any special arrangements have been made, students must refer to the arrangement in question (e.g. by mentioning the date of the email).

The easiest way for students to obtain a transcript of their completed studies is via WebOodi, but it is also possible to get an official copy from the University Student Services. After completing an entire study package (Basic, Intermediate or Advanced Studies), students should contact the student affairs office at the Faculty of Humanities and request that the studies be compiled as a package in the Oodi register. The study packages along with the corresponding overall grades will be listed in the student's degree certificate.

Special instructions for subsidiary subject students and those who have previously earned credit via Open University: Subsidiary subject students need not participate in the Proseminar in the Intermediate Studies. During the Advances studies, students taking Literature as a subsidiary subject may choose the option of writing a thesis in the subsidiary subject or taking corresponding studies; if this is the logic they were going for, the students must take part in the MA Thesis Seminar as well. Those students who came through the Open University must take the Proseminar before proceeding to the Thesis Seminar.

Employment prospects

The career prospects of students majoring in Literature are not strictly predefined, for the structure of the entire degree has an effect on their employment prospects. The range of degree possibilities is very diverse given the available subsidiary subject options. Different combinations of subjects provide qualifications for various professional fields: teaching on different levels; cultural work in the fields of publishing or communications and information; working in art or culture organisations or projects; writing, producing or developing content in various new and traditional media careers. Studying literature may also provide some of the basic qualifications for working in cultural administration or in libraries. Some students proceed to post-graduate studies, after which they may end up working as researchers.

At the start of their studies, students should acquaint themselves with the University Career Services and Student Services in order to find a good combination of subjects in regard to their career wishes. Students should also design their personal study plan (e-HOPS/e-PSP) with the help of the teachers of the degree programme and the study guidance provided by the University.

Literature can be taken as a major subject in the Teacher of Finnish and Literature degree, in which case Literature is combined with Finnish and Pedagogical Studies. Further information on subject teacher education can be found in a dedicated chapter in the study guide of the Faculty of Humanities.

The number of recommended subsidiary subjects for students aiming to be employed in the fields of culture or communications is unlimited, yet some examples include: Film Studies, Information Studies, Art History, Cultural Anthropology, Finnish or foreign languages, Communications Studies – or Sociology, Environmental Studies in the Humanities, Information Processing Science, and Marketing. Students' personal hobbies and cultural interests, their initiative, and possible earlier work experience have an especially important role when proceeding into working life after completing the degree.

Study packages and learning outcomes

After completing the Basic Studies package, students will be able to describe the different areas of literary research in a preliminary way, will be familiar with the central terminology of the field and will also be able to apply it to literary analysis and interpretation. Students will also be able to describe the history of different genres and styles from antiquity to the modern day, both for general as well as Finnish literature.

After completing the Intermediate Studies package, students will be able to describe the central theories and methodology trends in literary research. They will also be able to describe more deeply some aspects of literary research, cultural research or the teaching of literature and Finnish, as well as the key developments of a period in literary history and the literature of a specific language area. Students majoring in Literature will also be able to apply this knowledge to writing short academic theses.

After completing the Advanced Studies package, students will have the ability to apply various approaches of literary and cultural research to considering literary and cultural phenomena. Students will also have a detailed understanding of their chosen special focus of literary or cultural research and/or the teaching of Finnish and Literature. Students will have the skills to plan, carry out, and write an academic thesis. They will be able to apply their skills to working life: to comprehend and analyse large bodies of material, to work patiently on long projects, and to actively learn new things. The literary and cultural education will have given them an analytical imagination when considering questions that concern culture, individual subjects and society.

Language of instruction:

Finnish; a study package in English can be negotiated with the teacher

Timing:

1st year (most commonly the autumn term)

Learning outcomes:

Among the aims of this course is for students to gain an understanding of the classic works of Finnish literature, and to practise close reading and interpretation of literature, i.e. the application of the concepts of literary analysis to practice. Upon completion of the course, students will be able to analyse and evaluate literary art through writing and discussions, closely read texts (primarily fiction) with the application of basic concepts of the study of literature, as well as give and receive feedback. They will be able to analyse the structural and thematic aspects as well as the main contextual tenets of Finnish fiction.

Contents:

The course focuses on literary analysis and interpretation by delving into Finnish classics of modern literature (mostly narrative fiction), on which brief text analysis exercises are written and discussed in a group. Writing an essay from the view point of literary study is also practiced.

Mode of delivery:

Practicum group work for students majoring in Literature and for students majoring in Finnish and Saami who are in the subject teacher programme.

Written examination/essay/working in small groups for other subsidiary subject students.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

For students participating in the practicum: discussion in small groups led by a teacher, exercises.

For other students: independent study according to the general advice presented on the degree program webpage (e.g. advice on essay writing).

Target group:

For students majoring in Literature and for those subsidiary subject students who have Finnish or Saami as their major and are studying to become teachers, the course may not be taken as a book exam, home essay or self-study group and must be completed as a practicum. Other subsidiary subject students may complete the course by book exam, home essays, or a self-study group

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

See: Recommended optional programme components

Recommended optional programme components:

A list of works is available on the degree programme website at the beginning of each term. As mandatory background reading are especially texts concerning the analysis of narrative fiction (for these, too, see the website <http://www oulu.fi/kirjallisuus/>).

Recommended or required reading:

Language of instruction:

Finnish; a study package in English can be negotiated with the teacher

Timing:1st year (most commonly spring term)Learning outcomes:

The course aims to deepen the students' knowledge of classic literary works and to further improve their skills in literary analysis. It also gives practical knowledge on the methodological possibilities of literary research.

Upon completing the course, students will be more familiar with classic literary works and their main features. They will also be able to demonstrate skills in analysing the structures of narrative fiction, poetry and drama. They will be able to consider which methods of analysis and interpretation of literary texts can be applied to each case.

Contents:

The course focuses on the analysis and interpretation of literature by studying the classic works of modern literature (narrative fiction as well as poetry and drama). A number of short research texts considering those works will also be studied. The practicum involves a written assignment, which should be an interpretative text bearing more resemblance to an article than an essay. In the assignment, students should utilise the above-mentioned research texts. The assignment will be prepared during the practicum.

Mode of delivery:

Practicum group work for students majoring in Literature and for students majoring in Finnish and Saami who are in the subject teacher programme. Written examination/essay/working in small groups for other subsidiary subject students.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Fiction 1 along with additional texts included in the course, and Introduction to Literary Research 1

Recommended optional programme components:

See: Prerequisites and co-requisites. Literary History 1 and 2 as completed or contemporaneous courses required.

Recommended or required reading:

A list of works for narrative fiction will be made available on the degree programme website at the beginning of each term. Mandatory introductory texts regarding the basic concepts of literary analysis (including poetry and drama) as well as research literature for students participating in the practicum or writing an essay. More information on research literature will be available on the programme's webpage or during the practicum sessions

Assessment methods and criteria:

Supervised group work (Practicum), written assignments or examination

The assessment criteria for the practicum focuses on the application of concepts to practice essays and other exercises and discussions; on the linkage of conclusions to the texts and contexts; on the appropriateness, multidimensionality and structural qualities of the reasoning; on the commitment to dialogue and active participation in the group. Language of instruction:

Finnish

Timing:

After or during the final stages of the Basic Studies package, in practice during 1st year spring term or 2nd year

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to the relation between literature and society as well as the literary institution. Upon completion of the course, students will be better able to aspire to the societal contextualisation of literature and the assessment of the activities of different branches of the literary institution. Students will also be better acquainted with the societal contents of Finnish literature. They will be able to historically outline literary life, acquire knowledge of literary conversations past and present, and see potential employment prospects in the literary field.

Contents:

Introduction to the societal contexts of Finnish literature as well as the foundations and current state of the literary institution

Mode of delivery:

Lecture series or book exam

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Lectures with independent assignments, reading of some fiction alongside the lectures, final examination or a lecture/learning diary. Students may alternatively opt for a book exam.

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students of Literature

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Basic knowledge of literary history and basic analytical skills required; see: Recommended optional programme components

Recommended optional programme components:

Completion of all or most of the Basic Studies package required.

Recommended or required reading:

Supplementary material to the lecture series will be announced at the beginning of the course. The material for the book exam will be available on the degree programme's webpage.

Assessment methods and criteria:

Lecture or learning diary, final examination based on lecture series or book exam.

In the assessment of the fulfilment of the course through the lecture series, attention is paid on the students' command of the content of the lectures, the thoroughness of the additional assignments and, especially in the case of lecture or learning diaries, the students' own abilities for making connection between literary history and literary life. In the assessment of book examinations the main emphasis is on the testing of the students' command of the elements learned from the books (the students' own deductions may lead to better grades in the higher end of the scale, but less so in the lower – if students have not mastered the basic contents of the books, any deductions of one's own tend to go wrong).

Timing:

After successful completion of the Basic Studies package, generally midway through Intermediate Studies

Learning outcomes:

During the course, students will familiarise themselves with the theoretical and methodological questions surrounding either the history and current state of cultural studies or societal literary research. They will also familiarise themselves with cultural theory, the history of its concepts and their practical applications. The emphasis relative to skills in literary analysis and interpretation is above all on fortifying the students' grasp on historical and contextualising aspects. Upon completion of the course, students will have a better understanding of what methods and emphases of cultural and societal studies mean in relation to the study of literature. They will also have an impression of the meanings of concepts central to cultural theory, as well as the contexts of its progress and its potential applications to practice.

Contents:

The course offers two orientation options, which share some features. One option works as an introduction to the so called history of cultural studies and concepts of cultural theory (i.a. modern and postmodern; identity and subject; ideology, discourse and power). In addition to the above-mentioned concepts, the other option focuses on the methodology of societal literary research.

Mode of delivery:

Book exam taken on one of the faculty's scheduled examination dates, or lecture series arranged more infrequently, or a course resembling a seminar

Learning activities and teaching methods:

One of the following: lecture series; seminar with additional reading, introductions to various subjects and discussions; book exam; home essay

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students of Literature

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to the themes of gender, class and ethnicity in literature and culture. Upon completion of the course, students will be able to define and critically evaluate different socio-cultural categories, including gender and sexuality, class, "race", ethnicity and nationality. They will be able to apply literature to these questions and will have knowledge of the history and current state of the traditional theories concerned with these themes (i.e. feminist literary research, Marxist theory and post colonialism).

Contents:

Unlike introductory courses to cultural and societal studies and their relation to literature, the course offers a deeper insight into literary and cultural research concerning gender and sexuality, class and capitalism and ethnicity and nationality.

Mode of delivery:

A course concerning each of the themes is arranged approximately every three years or more frequently. Book exams can be taken on the faculty's scheduled examination days. Completion by essay or study group can be suggested to the teacher responsible.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Lectures, book exam, teaching in small groups, home essay or study group

Timing:1st year (most commonly the autumn term)Learning outcomes:

Among the aims of this course is for students to gain an understanding of the classic works of Finnish literature, and to practise close reading and interpretation of literature, i.e. the application of the concepts of literary analysis to practice. Upon completion of the course, students will be able to analyse and evaluate literary art through writing and discussions, closely read texts (primarily fiction) with the application of basic concepts of the study of literature, as well as give and receive feedback. They will be able to analyse the structural and thematic aspects as well as the main contextual tenets of Finnish fiction.

Contents:

The course focuses on literary analysis and interpretation by delving into Finnish classics of modern literature (mostly narrative fiction), on which brief text analysis exercises are written and discussed in a group. Writing an essay from the view point of literary study is also practiced.

Mode of delivery:

Practicum group work for students majoring in Literature and for students majoring in Finnish and Saami who are in the subject teacher programme.

Written examination/essay/working in small groups for other subsidiary subject students.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

For students participating in the practicum: discussion in small groups led by a teacher, exercises.

For other students: independent study according to the general advice presented on the degree program webpage (e.g. advice on essay writing).

Target group:

For students majoring in Literature and for those subsidiary subject students who have Finnish or Saami as their major and are studying to become teachers, the course may not be taken as a book exam, home essay or self-study group and must be completed as a practicum. Other subsidiary subject students may complete the course by book exam, home essays, or a self-study group

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

See: Recommended optional programme components

Recommended optional programme components:

A list of works is available on the degree programme website at the beginning of each term. As mandatory background reading are especially texts concerning the analysis of narrative fiction (for these, too, see the website <http://www oulu.fi/kirjallisuus/>).

Timing:

1st year (most commonly spring term)

Learning outcomes:

The course aims to deepen the students' knowledge of classic literary works and to further improve their skills in literary analysis. It also gives practical knowledge on the methodological possibilities of literary research.

Upon completing the course, students will be more familiar with classic literary works and their main features. They will also be able to demonstrate skills in analysing the structures of narrative fiction, poetry and drama. They will be able to consider which methods of analysis and interpretation of literary texts can be applied to each case.

Contents:

The course focuses on the analysis and interpretation of literature by studying the classic works of modern literature (narrative fiction as well as poetry and drama). A number of short research texts considering those works will also be studied. The practicum involves a written assignment, which should be an interpretative text bearing more resemblance to an article than an essay. In the assignment, students should utilise the above-mentioned research texts. The assignment will be prepared during the practicum.

Mode of delivery:

Practicum group work for students majoring in Literature and for students majoring in Finnish and Saami who are in the subject teacher programme. Written examination/essay/working in small groups for other subsidiary subject students.

Finnish; a study package in English can be negotiated with the teacher.

Timing:

After (or in final stage of) Basic Studies.

Learning outcomes:

Upon completion of the course, students will have deepened their knowledge on the history of Finnish literature. They will be able to better analyse and interpret the classics of Finnish literature in their literary and historical contexts.

Contents:

A course in the history of Finnish literature

Mode of delivery:

Contact teaching or independent study

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Lectures, book exam, or home essay.

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Successful completion of Literary History 1 and 2 required

Recommended optional programme components:

Though part of the literary history courses, the course focuses specifically on Finnish literary history

Recommended or required reading:

Literary history and fiction. An updated list of works is published annually on the degree programme's webpage.

Assessment methods and criteria:

The course can be taken by attending lectures, taking a book exam or by writing an essay

Grading:

0–5

Person responsible:

University lecturer

Working life cooperation:

None

Other information:

Possible titles and sources for essays must be agreed upon with the teacher responsible in advance. Students should contact the teacher after initially familiarising themselves with the survey of literary history that is to be examined (see the book list on the degree programme's website for more information).

5

Language of instruction:

Finnish

Timing:

After or during the final stages of the Basic Studies package, in practice during 1st year spring term or 2nd year

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to the relation between literature and society as well as the literary institution. Upon completion of the course, students will be better able to aspire to the societal contextualisation of literature and the assessment of the activities of different branches of the literary institution. Students will also be better acquainted with the societal contents of Finnish literature. They will be able to historically outline literary life, acquire knowledge of literary conversations past and present, and see potential employment prospects in the literary field.

Contents:

Introduction to the societal contexts of Finnish literature as well as the foundations and current state of the literary institution

Mode of delivery:

Lecture series or book exam

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Lectures with independent assignments, reading of some fiction alongside the lectures, final examination or a lecture/learning diary. Students may alternatively opt for a book exam.

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students of Literature

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Basic knowledge of literary history and basic analytical skills required; see: Recommended optional programme components

Recommended optional programme components:

Completion of all or most of the Basic Studies package required.

Recommended or required reading:

Supplementary material to the lecture series will be announced at the beginning of the course. The material for the book exam will be available on the degree programme's webpage.

Assessment methods and criteria:

Lecture or learning diary, final examination based on lecture series or book exam.

In the assessment of the fulfilment of the course through the lecture series, attention is paid on the students' command of the content of the lectures, the thoroughness of the additional assignments and, especially in the case of lecture or learning diaries, the students' own abilities for making connection between literary history and literary life. In the assessment of book examinations the main emphasis is on the testing of the students' command of the elements learned from the books (the students' own deductions may lead to better grades in the higher end of the scale, but less so in the lower – if students have not mastered the basic contents of the books, any deductions of one's own tend to go wrong).

Voidaan suorittaa useasti: Kyllä

ECTS Credits:

5

Language of instruction:

Finnish; a study package in English can be negotiated with the teacher

Timing:

After successful completion of the Basic Studies package, generally midway through Intermediate Studies

Learning outcomes:

During the course, students will familiarise themselves with the theoretical and methodological questions surrounding either the history and current state of cultural studies or societal literary research. They will also familiarise themselves with cultural theory, the history of its concepts and their practical applications. The emphasis relative to skills in literary analysis and interpretation is above all on fortifying the students' grasp on historical and contextualising aspects. Upon completion of the course, students will have a better understanding of what methods and emphases of cultural and societal studies mean in relation to the study of literature. They will also have an impression of the meanings of concepts central to cultural theory, as well as the contexts of its progress and its potential applications to practice.

Contents:

The course offers two orientation options, which share some features. One option works as an introduction to the so called history of cultural studies and concepts of cultural theory (i.a. modern and postmodern; identity and subject; ideology, discourse and power). In addition to the above-mentioned concepts, the other option focuses on the methodology of societal literary research.

Mode of delivery:

Book exam taken on one of the faculty's scheduled examination dates, or lecture series arranged more infrequently, or a course resembling a seminar

Learning activities and teaching methods:

One of the following: lecture series; seminar with additional reading, introductions to various subjects and discussions; book exam; home essay

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students of Literature

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Basic knowledge of literary interpretation with literature on methods, and the societal links between literature and culture. See: Recommended optional programme components

Recommended optional programme components:

Introduction to Literary Studies 2 and Literature in Society as completed or contemporaneous courses required. Recommended following course: Gender, Class and Multiculturalism

Language of instruction:

Finnish; a study package in English can be negotiated with the teacher

Timing:

After successful completion of the Basic Studies package

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to the themes of gender, class and ethnicity in literature and culture. Upon completion of the course, students will be able to define and critically evaluate different socio-cultural categories, including gender and sexuality, class, "race", ethnicity and nationality. They will be able to apply literature to these questions and will have knowledge of the history and current state of the traditional theories concerned with these themes (i.e. feminist literary research, Marxist theory and post colonialism).

Contents:

Unlike introductory courses to cultural and societal studies and their relation to literature, the course offers a deeper insight into literary and cultural research concerning gender and sexuality, class and capitalism and ethnicity and nationality.

Mode of delivery:

A course concerning each of the themes is arranged approximately every three years or more frequently. Book exams can be taken on the faculty's scheduled examination days. Completion by essay or study group can be suggested to the teacher responsible.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Lectures, book exam, teaching in small groups, home essay or study group

Target group:

Major and subsidiary subject students of Literature

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Basic knowledge of the relationship between literature and society and/or cultural studies

Recommended optional programme components:

Voidaan suorittaa useasti: Kyllä

ECTS Credits:

5 ECTS credits

Language of instruction:

Finnish

Timing:

Towards the end of studies

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to media writing, especially literary and cultural criticism. Upon completion of the course, students will be better able to write literary criticism, essayistic literature on culture or e.g. literary articles or reviews popularising science/academic research. They will be able to recognise genres of writing about science and art and the formal requirements of the publishing forum.

Contents:

Practical reflection, practicing and self-assessment of writing literary and cultural criticism and popular academic writing, and other writing in new or old media.

Mode of delivery:

A portfolio or project with self-assessment and supplementary reading to be agreed upon with the teacher responsible. An opportunity for a course-based mode of delivery will be offered relatively infrequently by the degree programme.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

The course will usually be completed as a self-reflecting portfolio, in which the students' own media writing is proportioned to the commentary literature regarding a chosen field (e.g. literary criticism) and to topical discussion on the subject. Occasionally the course can be completed by various writing courses or projects. Suggestions about projects (including group projects) can be made to the teacher responsible for the course.

Target group:

Students majoring in Literature, students oriented to the culture sector or science communication

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Good skills in literary analysis and interpretation and knowledge of the literary institution or more generally of art discussion or science communication

Recommended optional programme components:

Successful completion of most of the Intermediate Studies package in Literature (including the proseminar for students majoring in Literature)

Recommended or required reading:

Supplementary reading for self-directed study and details regarding mode of delivery to be discussed with the teacher responsible. Information on supplementary reading will be available on the potential courses.

Learning outcomes:

Upon completion of the course, students will be able to assess and analyse cultural theory and will be especially familiar with the social, cultural and sociopsychological aspects affecting the formation of identity, and the researching of these aspects in literature. They will have familiarised themselves with the classics and later discussion on the areas of cultural studies and/or societal literary research. They will be able to apply their knowledge to the critical interpretation of cultural representations and societal contents of literature.

Contents:

Advanced study of cultural theory and societal literary research. Special fields of cultural theory and trends of societal literary research, especially critical research examining the relationships of an individual, culture and society.

Mode of delivery:

Various possibilities, to be agreed upon with supervisor of Master's Thesis or the teacher responsible for the course

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Book exam, home essay, research paper or article, study group with learning diary, optionally a special course organised by the degree programme (compatibility to be negotiated in advance unless mentioned in the study guide)

Target group:

Students majoring in Literature, and subsidiary subject students planning on writing a thesis in subsidiary subject in particular

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Successful completion of most of the Intermediate Studies package required

Recommended optional programme components:

A special course intended to support the writing of a master's thesis

Recommended or required reading:

Materials to be agreed upon separately with the teacher responsible for the course

Assessment methods and criteria:

The course can be completed as a tailored book exam, home essay, research paper or by (process) writing an article. A course fitting the special field of a possible master's thesis is also an option. A good way to complete the course is a study group, especially organising and running a study group and writing a learning diary. The course can be completed as 5 ECTS credits or two packages each worth 5 ECTS credits.

Opintokohteen kielet: Finnish

Voidaan suorittaa useasti: Kyllä

ECTS Credits:

5 ECTS credits

Language of instruction:

Finnish

Timing:

Towards the end of studies

Learning outcomes:

The course works as an introduction to media writing, especially literary and cultural criticism. Upon completion of the course, students will be better able to write literary criticism, essayistic literature on culture or e.g. literary articles or reviews popularising science/academic research. They will be able to recognise genres of writing about science and art and the formal requirements of the publishing forum.

Contents:

Practical reflection, practicing and self-assessment of writing literary and cultural criticism and popular academic writing, and other writing in new or old media.

Mode of delivery:

A portfolio or project with self-assessment and supplementary reading to be agreed upon with the teacher responsible. An opportunity for a course-based mode of delivery will be offered relatively infrequently by the degree programme.

Learning activities and teaching methods:

The course will usually be completed as a self-reflecting portfolio, in which the students' own media writing is proportioned to the commentary literature regarding a chosen field (e.g. literary criticism) and to topical discussion on the subject. Occasionally the course can be completed by various writing courses or projects. Suggestions about projects (including group projects) can be made to the teacher responsible for the course.

Target group:

Students majoring in Literature, students oriented to the culture sector or science communication

Prerequisites and co-requisites:

Good skills in literary analysis and interpretation and knowledge of the literary institution or more generally of art discussion or science communication

Recommended optional programme components:

Successful completion of most of the Intermediate Studies package in Literature (including the proseminar for students majoring in Literature)

Recommended or required reading:

Supplementary reading for self-directed study and details regarding mode of delivery to be discussed with the teacher responsible. Information on supplementary reading will be available on the potential courses.
