Admission requirements

Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language is a subsidiary (minor) subject aimed at students studying the Finnish Language as their major or as a subsidiary subject and are native speakers of Finnish. Anyone wishing to commence studies in Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language must first have completed the Basic Level studies package in the Finnish Language programme (25 ECTS credits).

Study guidance

The University Lecturer Jarmo Harri Jantunen can be reached in his office, HU137, during his office hour as well as via telephone, email or the Optima internet workspace.

Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language

The Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language programme offers a Basic Level study package (25 ECTS credits) as well as an Intermediate Level study package (35 ECTS credits). The studies are aimed at students who are interested in teaching Finnish as a second language in Finland or as a foreign language abroad. The programme familiarizes the students with Finnish as a foreign language as well as gives the students the qualifications to teach the subject in schools. The subject examines Finland as a multicultural country and Finnish study materials, and also acquaints the students with characteristics of learner language and assessment of language proficiency as well as with teaching in practise.

Employment prospects

Students taking Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language as a subsidiary subject typically have little trouble finding employment teaching Finnish to foreigners. The demand for S2 teaching has been constantly growing in Finland, and also in northern Finland as well. In addition, Finnish is taught approximately in 100 universities abroad. Taking the programme as a subsidiary subject offers students of Finnish Language an alternative in addition to a career teaching Finnish literature and Finnish as a mother tongue.

Practical information

Successful completion of the programme requires a fair amount of independent work. Studies include, amongst other things, online courses, work training, book exams and face-to-face group work with other students. The online environment functions, right from the beginning of studies, as an important environment for study, reporting and self-reflection. Using this environment, all Basic Level studies and almost all Intermediate Level studies can be completed as distance learning. Every course in the programme is at least partly carried out online. The online courses are in the Optima online learning environment, which functions as the primary channel of communication in the programme.

The studies include tutoring and work training, which may be completed in via work placement which the students themselves secure, in Finland or abroad during international student exchange e.g.

A final, weighted grade for the Basic Level study package is assessed based on the student's course grades. The Intermediate study package is assessed based on the average of student's course grades + the weighted grade from the Basic Level study package. Basic and Intermediate study package results are officially placed in the student's record by University Lecturer Jarmo H. Jantunen.

A curriculum is published at the beginning of each term on the website of the programme. For information regarding available Intermediate Level courses, students should turn to the programme's website. The periods used in the course descriptions are timed as follows: periods 1 and 2 are during the autumn term; and periods 3 and 4 are taught during the spring term.

Most of the Basic Studies courses include a book exam. The exam can be completed on a Faculty of Humanities examination date, separately assigned for each course. These dates are made available online. Students should sign up for book exams on Faculty of Humanities examination dates via Weboodi at least 10 days prior to the examination day. Late sign-ups are not considered. Signing-up is not required for lecture examinations.

Students must enrol for studies in the Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language programme at the information session held at the beginning of each autumn term. For individual courses, enrolment is via the Optima environment.

Study packages and learning outcomes

Upon completion of the Basic Level studies in Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language, students can utilize basic concepts from the S2 field and are knowledgeable about the students who are studying Finnish as a foreign language. Students can explain the nature of the education provided for learners of Finnish on different levels. They can describe how learners of Finnish should be guided in acquiring both linguistic and social knowledge and skills, and are able to apply this information into practise. Students should also be able to recognize the differences in intercultural communication and are knowledgeable about Finland as a multicultural society. Students can also explain the basis of assessment of language proficiency and apply the knowledge in their teaching. After completing the Basic Level studies, students also have the skills to search for basic literature to support their research and teaching and apply the information into practise.

Upon completion of the Intermediate Level studies in Finnish as a Second and Foreign Language, students are able to teach Finnish as a second and a foreign language. They can conduct research and teach foreign students by applying theories of learning and teaching languages and are able to analyse and assess models and conventions /methods of teaching. The students are able to use various teaching methods and can explain why matters are taught in a certain order. Students are can also apply and produce S2 teaching materials. After completing the Intermediate Level studies, students can describe the characteristics of learner language and are able to interpret, analyse and apply research results in S2 field as well as apply these results in their own research and teaching.
